Whether or not they have "formally voted" to do so, the district and police judges of Massachusetts and of every other state, for that matter-may well impose jail sentences on automobilists found guilty of drunkenness while driving their machines. There is law enough to warrant it, and public sentiment, among automobilists especially, certainly approves it. No drunken man can possibly be a safe driver. A fine is not afficient punishment for a man who drives an automobile when under the nfluence of liquor. Often it is no punshment at all. And not only should jail sentences be officted on drivers who are drunk from the drinking of too much liquor, but also on those who are drunk with speed move at once to Northfield, where Mr. madness or with contempt for the rights at the J. K. Lynde store, now the Hoyt, ance sermon to the victims, and they
